

Judge Ravi K. Sandill

127th District Court

Judge Ravi K. Sandill attended college in Austin and graduated from law school in Houston. After graduating law school, Judge Sandill worked as a briefing attorney for Murry Cohen, Senior Justice on Texas's First District Court of Appeals. He then went into private practice in Houston, where he focused on commercial, appellate, and trade secret litigation for a number of years.

Ravi first ran for judge in 2008, when he prevailed over a 28-year incumbent to become judge of the 127th District Court. He is the first ever district court judge in Texas of South Asian descent and has presided over more than 225 civil trials. Judge Sandill has implemented a number of cost and time saving measures to better support the people of Harris County.
